

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Steamer City of New-York.

Speech by Mr. Adams to the Trade Unionists

The London Times Regards it as Reasonable and Timely.

A MORE AMICABLE TONE PREVAILING.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE COTTON TRADE.

The Answer of Russia on the Polish Question.

DEFEAT OF THE RUSSIANS IN TWO ENGAGEMENTS.

France.

Politics unimportant. The Moniteur denies on a visit to the Emperor.

On the Paris Bourse, on the 5th, the 3rd cent.

Preliminary arrangements had been completed in London with a view to the establishment of an International Association in connection with the Credit Mobilier of Paris and some of the leading bankers there. Messrs. Peabody &amp; Co. and other firms of the greatest eminence are connected with the important undertaking.

Another important financial combination between Paris and London—so called the "Society Generale"—and embracing all the leading Parisian bankers, &amp;c., not connected with the Credit Mobilier, is announced. The head of the Association in London will be Mr. Samuel Laing, the late Indian Finance Minister.

The Times (City Article) says the funds opened yesterday at a slight reaction, and were dull throughout the day, although in speculative depots there were two instances of an increase of animation. The Turkish Consignment, 1½ per cent higher.

Spanish declined ½. Confederate Loan was less firm. English Railways were flat. Demand for discount at the Bank was slight. There were no Gold operations. There is still an absence of any Gold demand for the Continent.

The Cabinet of Turin had announced to the Swiss Federal Government that it will now withdraw its troops from the Swiss frontier, since after the arrests made in Italy apprehensions are no longer entertained of a Mazzinian expedition.

Prince Ruggiero Setimo, President of the Senate, and the former President of Sicily in 1848, died at Modica.

A dispatch is published addressed by the Minister of the Interior to the Prefects, relative to meetings in favor of Poland. The Minister refers to the debates on the subject in Parliament, and states that the meetings in question are a pretext for agitation, and for obstruction of the action of the Government.

He concludes by enjoining the authorities to dissolve every political meeting of a character to endanger the interior or exterior safety of the state.

The Polish Question.

The reply of Russia to the Governments of England, France, and Austria were delivered to those Governments respectively on the 2d inst. The Paris Press says, in reference to the note to France:

Russia declares her good intentions toward Poland, and expresses a desire to satisfy the Powers within the limits prescribed by her own safety and dignity.

The reply, on the whole, is of a specific character.

The Paris correspondent of The Times suspects the Emperor's opinion that Russia will do nothing unless England, France, and Austria act in unity and put a great pressure upon her. She will do nothing if the act separates France; thinks the best results ought to follow from the united action which she so much desires, and that with little or no cost in men or money.

In such cases the Emperor would disclaim all intention or desire of seeking any advantage for himself, but if France be left alone to decide, which is not so improbable as may be supposed, on acting by herself in rescuing Poland, she will think that all her blood and treasure should not be lavished without compensation, where that compensation is to be given in another question.

The Royal Agricultural Society has decided to hold its annual show for 1863 at Newcastle.

A Committee of the Cabinet Council held a meeting yesterday, at the residence of the Secretary of State for War. The Duke of Cambridge was present.

The London Times, referring to Mr. Newgate's speech in the House of Commons, terms it an experiment in political alchemy. Church rates are not property till they are voted, when they become the property of the Church.

Prince Gorchakoff doubts not that Austria will neglect nothing in order to put a stop to the machinations of the revolutionary party.

The London Times says that Lord Russell referred to the recollection of Russia the stipulations of the European settlement of 1815, and all the rights and privileges guaranteed to Poland by a loan treaty, which were ignored for a generation, and finally torn up at Warsaw in 1830; Russia, in a conciliatory tone, declares herself ready to enter with England into a consideration of the terms and conditions of those treaties, with the purpose of ascertaining how much of that ancient charter can be made a modern reality, for England is assured that Russia is really anxious to promote the welfare of Poland.

The intrigues of the Foreign Revolutionary party are the main source of the agitation; and the influence of Great Powers world; therefore, be less exercised if directed against those intrigues. Prince Gorchakoff doubts not that Austria will neglect nothing in order to put a stop to the machinations of the revolutionary party.

The London Times says that Lord Russell referred to the recollection of Russia the stipulations of the European settlement of 1815, and all the rights and privileges guaranteed to Poland by a loan treaty, which were ignored for a generation, and finally torn up at Warsaw in 1830; Russia, in a conciliatory tone, declares herself ready to enter with England into a consideration of the terms and conditions of those treaties, with the purpose of ascertaining how much of that ancient charter can be made a modern reality, for England is assured that Russia is really anxious to promote the welfare of Poland.

The three Prussian answers have one common purpose, but the manner in which it is conveyed is not skillfully varied. In reply to the Austrian note, Russia pleads the difficulty of dealing with the intricacies of the revolutionary party abroad. Austria is reminded that she shares the danger, as a possessor of Polish territory, and has not yet been so ready in action as such others. I trust that in spite of all that has occurred, there is in the Government of each country a sufficient sense of responsibility, which will induce them to maintain friendly relations with each other.

There is not naturally a feeling of pride, or fear, but the two sides appear to return from property to property, what is not deemed to be an offence, and in this lies the great danger. I feel confident, however, that if two or three powers of the two Governments would speak together in the same sense, in the same frank and unequivocal terms as you have spoken to me this evening, all fear of any collision would be at an end. [Hear, hear.] I can assure that notwithstanding the speeches of some of my countrymen, not withstanding the writings in some American journals, there is no nation under the sun for which America entertains a greater regard than England, and if the real sentiments of the people of each country can be clearly established to each other I shall have no fear of their coming into collision. [Cheers.] I believe, gentlemen, you have taken the right course to produce this desirable understanding, and I shall undertake with great pleasure the duty of at once transmitting your address to President Lincoln. [Cheers.]

The London Times looks upon Mr. Adams' speech as most reasonable and timely. "A good many words may pass," says The Times, "without leading to blows, and as we are confident that neither Englishmen nor Americans have the least wish to go to war with each other, we look forward without mistrust to that mutual forbearance on the part of their Government which Mr. Adams so wisely invokes. We must submit to certain interruptions in our trade in deference to the rights of a belligerent. The Americans must tolerate some shorings-up on our part, in consideration of the difficulties of a neutral. We can assure them if they need the assurance, that not a single violation of our neutrality would ever occur without the regret of the Government and the deprecation of the public. Such of these cannot be easily prevented."

In another editorial, The Times shows reasons why England must put the most favorable construction possible on the proceedings of the Union cruisers.

In the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, on the 4th inst., a letter was read from the Foreign Office, dated the 10th of April, acknowledging the receipt of a memorial from the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, on the subject of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and stating that her Majesty's Government can, on consideration, see how any improvement can be made in that act.

Mr. King moved that the Chamber express its hope that in case further experience beyond the scope of the Alabama shall show that the Foreign Enlistment Act is not efficient for the accomplishment of its object in which British interests are so deeply involved, immediate steps should be taken to remedy the deficiency before precedents should grow up which might seriously embarrass England whenever she might be engaged in war. The motion was unanimously agreed to.

The London Observer, in a pacific editorial on America, does justice to President Lincoln and his advisers, who, it says, evince a sincere and earnest desire to cultivate the most friendly relations with Great Britain, and to avoid giving just cause of offence.

The opinion gains ground that the improvement in the cotton trade lately has been considerable, and it is observable in the manufacturing districts that a greater number of chimneys are smoking.

Parliamentary Proceedings.

In the House of Commons, on the 4th instant, Mr. Peacock gave notice that on the 5th instant he should call attention to the case of the "Sea Queen," for Matamoras, and ask why a certain dispatch had been suppressed.

Mr. Layard, in reply to Mr. Maguire, said that the American flag had been hoisted down on the Island of "Samboe," during the stay of H. M. S. "Preston" there. It was not true that the island had been discovered by the Americans, ten years ago, for it had long been part of the British possessions in the Caribbean Sea. It had been settled by a party of Americans who had a mine there, and the Captain of the Phœnix had taken eleven other estates in that neighborhood.

was unwilling while he stayed there to recognize that occupation. There had been no correspondence.

Mr. Gladstone made a powerful speech in defense of his proposition to extend the Income tax to charitable institutions; but afterward, admitting that the House was against the project, he consented to wind up in the midst of long cheers.

The Prince and Princess of Wales visited the House during the proceedings for the first time.

In the House of Commons, on the 5th inst., Mr. Lavard, in response to Lord R. Cecil, made some explanation as the main on board the U. S. steamer Peterhoff, and the promise of the American Government that they should be delivered up.

Lord Hartington, formerly a prominent politician, and at one time Chief Secretary for Ireland, died on the 4th inst., aged 73 years.

Preliminary arrangements had been completed in London with a view to the establishment of an International Association in connection with the Credit Mobilier of Paris and some of the leading bankers there. Messrs. Peabody &amp; Co. and other firms of the greatest eminence are connected with the important undertaking.

Lord Hartington, formerly a prominent politician, and at one time Chief Secretary for Ireland, died on the 4th inst., aged 73 years.

Another important financial combination between Paris and London—so called the "Society Generale"—and embracing all the leading Parisian bankers, &amp;c., not connected with the Credit Mobilier, is announced. The head of the Association in London will be Mr. Samuel Laing, the late Indian Finance Minister.

The Times (City Article) says the funds opened yesterday at a slight reaction, and were dull throughout the day, although in speculative depots there were two instances of an increase of animation. The Turkish Consignment, 1½ per cent higher.

Spanish declined ½. Confederate Loan was less firm. English Railways were flat. Demand for discount at the Bank was slight. There were no Gold operations. There is still an absence of any Gold demand for the Continent.

The Cabinet of Turin had announced to the Swiss Federal Government that it will now withdraw its troops from the Swiss frontier, since after the arrests made in Italy apprehensions are no longer entertained of a Mazzinian expedition.

Prince Ruggiero Setimo, President of the Senate, and the former President of Sicily in 1848, died at Modica.

A dispatch is published addressed by the Minister of the Interior to the Prefects, relative to meetings in favor of Poland. The Minister refers to the debates on the subject in Parliament, and states that the meetings in question are a pretext for agitation, and for obstruction of the action of the Government.

He concludes by enjoining the authorities to dissolve every political meeting of a character to endanger the interior or exterior safety of the state.

The Polish Question.

The reply of Russia to the Governments of England, France, and Austria were delivered to those Governments respectively on the 2d inst. The Paris Press says, in reference to the note to France:

Russia declares her good intentions toward Poland, and expresses a desire to satisfy the Powers within the limits prescribed by her own safety and dignity.

The reply, on the whole, is of a specific character.

The Paris correspondent of The Times suspects the Emperor's opinion that Russia will do nothing unless England, France, and Austria act in unity and put a great pressure upon her. She will do nothing if the act separates France; thinks the best results ought to follow from the united action which she so much desires, and that with little or no cost in men or money.

In such cases the Emperor would disclaim all intention or desire of seeking any advantage for himself, but if France be left alone to decide, which is not so improbable as may be supposed, on acting by herself in rescuing Poland, she will think that all her blood and treasure should not be lavished without compensation, where that compensation is to be given in another question.

The Royal Agricultural Society has decided to hold its annual show for 1863 at Newcastle.

A Committee of the Cabinet Council held a meeting yesterday, at the residence of the Secretary of State for War. The Duke of Cambridge was present.

The London Times, referring to Mr. Newgate's speech in the House of Commons, terms it an experiment in political alchemy. Church rates are not property till they are voted, when they become the property of the Church.

Prince Gorchakoff doubts not that Austria will neglect nothing in order to put a stop to the machinations of the revolutionary party.

The London Times says that Lord Russell referred to the recollection of Russia the stipulations of the European settlement of 1815, and all the rights and privileges guaranteed to Poland by a loan treaty, which were ignored for a generation, and finally torn up at Warsaw in 1830; Russia, in a conciliatory tone, declares herself ready to enter with England into a consideration of the terms and conditions of those treaties, with the purpose of ascertaining how much of that ancient charter can be made a modern reality, for England is assured that Russia is really anxious to promote the welfare of Poland.

The three Prussian answers have one common purpose, but the manner in which it is conveyed is not skillfully varied. In reply to the Austrian note, Russia pleads the difficulty of dealing with the intricacies of the revolutionary party abroad. Austria is reminded that she shares the danger, as a possessor of Polish territory, and has not yet been so ready in action as such others. I trust that in spite of all that has occurred, there is in the Government of each country a sufficient sense of responsibility, which will induce them to maintain friendly relations with each other.

There is not naturally a feeling of pride, or fear, but the two sides appear to return from property to property, what is not deemed to be an offence, and in this lies the great danger. I feel confident, however, that if two or three powers of the two Governments would speak together in the same sense, in the same frank and unequivocal terms as you have spoken to me this evening, all fear of any collision would be at an end. [Hear, hear.] I can assure that notwithstanding the speeches of some of my countrymen, not withstanding the writings in some American journals, there is no nation under the sun for which America entertains a greater regard than England, and if the real sentiments of the people of each country can be clearly established to each other I shall have no fear of their coming into collision. [Cheers.] I believe, gentlemen, you have taken the right course to produce this desirable understanding, and I shall undertake with great pleasure the duty of at once transmitting your address to President Lincoln. [Cheers.]

The London Times looks upon Mr. Adams' speech as most reasonable and timely. "A good many words may pass," says The Times, "without leading to blows, and as we are confident that neither Englishmen nor Americans have the least wish to go to war with each other, we look forward without mistrust to that mutual forbearance on the part of their Government which Mr. Adams so wisely invokes. We must submit to certain interruptions in our trade in deference to the rights of a belligerent. The Americans must tolerate some shorings-up on our part, in consideration of the difficulties of a neutral. We can assure them if they need the assurance, that not a single violation of our neutrality would ever occur without the regret of the Government and the deprecation of the public. Such of these cannot be easily prevented."

In another editorial, The Times shows reasons why England must put the most favorable construction possible on the proceedings of the Union cruisers.

In the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, on the 4th inst., a letter was read from the Foreign Office, dated the 10th of April, acknowledging the receipt of a memorial from the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, on the subject of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and stating that her Majesty's Government can, on consideration, see how any improvement can be made in that act.

Mr. King moved that the Chamber express its hope that in case further experience beyond the scope of the Alabama shall show that the Foreign Enlistment Act is not efficient for the accomplishment of its object in which British interests are so deeply involved, immediate steps should be taken to remedy the deficiency before precedents should grow up which might seriously embarrass England whenever she might be engaged in war. The motion was unanimously agreed to.

The London Observer, in a pacific editorial on America, does justice to President Lincoln and his advisers, who, it says, evince a sincere and earnest desire to cultivate the most friendly relations with Great Britain, and to avoid giving just cause of offence.

The opinion gains ground that the improvement in the cotton trade lately has been considerable, and it is observable in the manufacturing districts that a greater number of chimneys are smoking.

Parliamentary Proceedings.

In the House of Commons, on the 4th instant, Mr. Peacock gave notice that on the 5th instant he should call attention to the case of the "Sea Queen," for Matamoras, and ask why a certain dispatch had been suppressed.

Mr. Layard, in reply to Mr. Maguire, said that the American flag had been hoisted down on the Island of "Samboe," during the stay of H. M. S. "Preston" there. It was not true that the island had been discovered by the Americans, ten years ago, for it had long been part of the British possessions in the Caribbean Sea. It had been settled by a party of Americans who had a mine there, and the Captain of the Phœnix had taken eleven other estates in that neighborhood.

was unwilling while he stayed there to recognize that occupation. There had been no correspondence.

Mr. Gladstone made a powerful speech in defense of his proposition to extend the Income tax to charitable institutions; but afterward, admitting that the House was against the project, he consented to wind up in the midst of long cheers.

The Prince and Princess of Wales visited the House during the proceedings for the first time.

In the House of Commons, on the 5th inst., Mr. Lavard, in response to Lord R. Cecil, made some explanation as the main on board the U. S. steamer Peterhoff, and the promise of the American Government that they should be delivered up.

Lord Hartington, formerly a prominent politician, and at one time Chief Secretary for Ireland, died on the 4th inst., aged 73 years.

Preliminary arrangements had been completed in London with a view to the establishment of an International Association in connection with the Credit Mobilier of Paris and some of the leading bankers there. Messrs. Peabody &amp; Co. and other firms of the greatest eminence are connected with the important undertaking.

Another important financial combination between Paris and London—so called the "Society Generale"—and embracing all the leading Parisian bankers, &amp;c., not connected with the Credit Mobilier, is announced. The head of the Association in London will be Mr. Samuel Laing, the late Indian Finance Minister.

The Times (City Article) says the funds opened yesterday at a slight reaction, and were dull throughout the day, although in speculative depots there were two instances of an increase of animation. The Turkish Consignment, 1½ per cent higher.

Spanish declined ½. Confederate Loan was less firm. English Railways were flat. Demand for discount at the Bank was slight. There were no Gold operations. There is still an absence of any Gold demand for the Continent.

The Cabinet of Turin had announced to the Swiss Federal Government that it will now withdraw its troops from the Swiss frontier, since after the arrests made in Italy apprehensions are no longer entertained of a Mazzinian expedition.

Prince Ruggiero Setimo, President of the Senate, and the former President of Sicily in 1848, died at Modica.

A dispatch is published addressed by the Minister of the Interior to the Prefects, relative to meetings in favor of Poland. The Minister refers to the debates on the subject in Parliament, and states that the meetings in question are a pretext for agitation, and for obstruction of the action of the Government.

He concludes by enjoining the authorities to dissolve every political meeting of a character to endanger the interior or exterior safety of the state.

The Polish Question.

The reply of Russia to the Governments of England, France, and Austria were delivered to those Governments respectively on the 2d inst. The Paris Press says, in reference to the note to France:

Russia declares her good intentions toward Poland, and expresses a desire to satisfy the Powers within the limits prescribed by her own safety and dignity.

The reply, on the whole, is of a specific character.

The Paris correspondent of The Times suspects the Emperor's opinion that Russia will do nothing unless England, France, and Austria act in unity and put a great pressure upon her. She will do nothing if the act separates France; thinks the best results ought to follow from the united action which she so much desires, and that with little or no cost in men or money.

In such cases the Emperor would disclaim all intention or desire of seeking any advantage for himself, but if France be left alone to decide, which is not so improbable as may be supposed, on acting by herself in rescuing Poland, she will think that all her blood and treasure should not be lavished without compensation, where that compensation is to be given in another question.

The Royal Agricultural Society has decided to hold its annual show for 1863 at Newcastle.

A Committee of the Cabinet Council held a meeting yesterday, at the residence of the Secretary of State for War. The Duke of Cambridge was present.